The first floor housed an engineer's store, and the third floor a grain store. The basement contained a liquor store and a general store. In 1874 the building was converted to a church by removing the first floor to create a double-storey space and is used as the All Saints Anglican Church today. However, taking pride of place is the 1876 Henry (Father) Willis organ located in a spacious chamber to the south-east of the building.
